TENDERO MAMVURA

Hi, I'm Tendero (most people call me Ten). I'm a Computer Science student at the University of Pretoria, and Maths, Physics and Computer Science have always been my strongest subjects — I got an A* in IGCSE Computer Science and a Distinction in a Computer Engineering diploma. I've got five younger siblings, and tutoring found me quite naturally through them. I'm currently helping one work through her Maths and Physics ahead of her IGCSE exams, and with the others I'll help them with homework or just end up geeking out about physics, trying to explain complex topics simply because I genuinely enjoy it. My approach is all about patience and making it fun and interesting, breaking a problem into smaller pieces and coming at it from a different angle if the first explanation doesn't land, until it actually clicks.

Outside of tutoring, I'm currently teaching myself guitar and messing around with dual-booting Linux and Windows in my spare time. I also really value time with my friends — I feel like I learn something new and grow a little every time I'm around them.
